Honorable Allen W. Dulles
Director, Central Intelligence Agency

Dear Mr. Dulles:

X6 The USIB, at its 5 May meeting, discussed at considerable length the release of [redacted] At various times during the discussion we mentioned factors such as "quid pro quo," "net advantage," "promoting the national security," and so on.

25X

I, for one, felt that the members of the Intelligence Board may be using slightly different yardsticks with which to measure the pros and cons of the release of NIE's. I have reviewed Tab "C" of IAC-D-115/1, dated 8 April 1958, and the documents to which that Tab refers. They are, understandably, quite general in their language; but they do provide a common basis for picking explicit guidelines for judging each specific release proposal.

I therefore believe that it would be useful to make sure there is a mutuality of understanding of the criteria applicable to proposed releases of national intelligence to foreign governments. My suggestion is not for any change in criteria but for a review of them. If you and the other members agree, I recommend we ask the Security Committee of USIB--or other appropriate mechanism--to examine the matter and to report to us their findings.

Sincerely,

Robert Breitweiser
